

Office of Michael H. Barnes, P.E.

City of Richland Hills, Texas

Memorandum

To: Honorable Mayor Bill Agan and members of the Richland Hills City Council
From: Michael Barnes, P.E., City Engineer
Date: December 30, 2013
Subject: CDBG 40th Year Project

Council Action Requested:

Conduct a Public Hearing for the 40th Year CDBG Project

Background Information:

Staff is requesting City Council conduct a public hearing in order to receive input from any resident concerning a utility project for the replacement of sewer lines on Birch Park (3105 to 3121) 550' in length, Maple Park (7102 to 7118) 515' in length, and a portion of Oak Park (7123 to 7139) 577' in length to include the replacement of services. Tarrant County has informed staff the city will receive $120,000.00 to $140,000.00 in funding for this years' allotment.

You will note that this year's CDBG application changes the focus of our program of work from previous years. In years past, we have applied for CDBG projects to improve streets. In speaking with the County, they informed us that although streets are still an eligible project, the County would actually prefer for us to use the funds on Water or Wastewater projects. As Council is aware, we have a much more immediate need to be doing work on Wastewater projects anyway, so their desired focus fits well with our needs. As such, staff is proposing applying for CDBG to work on wastewater lines this year.

Board/Citizen Input: N/A

Financial Impact: City will receive $120,000.00 to $140,000.00 in funding from CDBG

CITY OF RICHLAND HILLS

COMPREHENSIVE MASTER PLAN
INTRODUCTION

The Task

The City of Richland Hills has undertaken the significant task of preparing a city-wide Comprehensive Plan. For Richland Hills, this will be the first master plan, and therefore it is a milestone in the development process of the city. During the preparation of the plan, efforts have been made to involve the City Planning Commission, the City Council, and perhaps most vital - a Citizens Advisory Committee.

Purpose

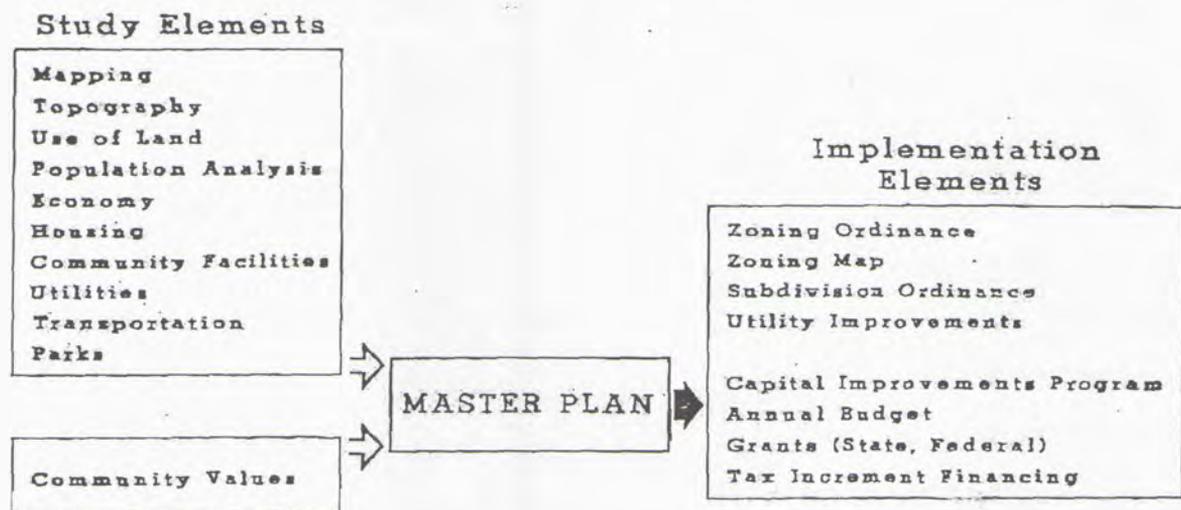

In simple terms, planning is thinking ahead for the future. In the same way that individuals and families prepare socially, financially and philosophically for the future, communities must prepare physically, economically and culturally to make them good places to live.

A comprehensive plan is an official plan document intended to guide Richland Hills development to occur in an orderly, compatible, efficient, and financially acceptable manner to the residents of the City. Although the plan itself is not a legal document, such as a zoning ordinance or subdivision ordinance, it is used to substantiate ordinances as well as establish general land development policies administered by Planning Commissioners and City Councilmen.

In recognition of the fact that this plan is truly "comprehensive" and involves many community elements, such as city land use, demographic composition, transportation, water and sewer utilities and others, it provides documentation for future governmental decision makers. The policies and actual comprehensive plan, that evolve during the planning process, are then not only valuable to those with review authority but also to landowners and developers.

Process

The process of planning involves numerous steps, each building upon earlier findings. Two primary "inputs" are required for the development of a comprehensive plan: 1. Technical study elements and 2. Community values. From these two steps a plan may be developed, and implemented through various methods. The following chart illustrates those planning inputs.

The program to be followed includes the following steps:

1. Inventory - A basic description of the existing components of life in Richland Hills, Texas. The physical man-made systems such as utilities, housing, streets and community facilities are commonly referred to as "infrastructure." The existing physical and societal infrastructure inventory is the initial step in the planning process.
2. Problem Assessment and Analysis - Based upon findings in the City's inventory, a recognition of assets and problems can be identified. Projections for population and consequent demands for city services are analyzed. Richland Hills regional location will also play a role in the analysis section due to the high level of interaction between Richland Hills and other communities within the Dallas - Fort Worth Metroplex. Obstacles to orderly development are reviewed and potential solutions are considered.

3. Goals and Objectives - Following some analysis of various elements, a unified position toward solving identified problems is needed. To have a clear perception of the relative merits of various solutions, some community standards and objectives are required. Based on these objectives, policy decisions related to future city-wide development can be made. On the basis of individual decisions a long range coordinated benefit should be achieved.
4. Plan Alternatives - With the identification of issues, and community value directives, a number of options are available as solutions. Typically no single option is 100% satisfactory, which means that there are positive and negative ramifications of following that solution. Various planning approaches or alternatives are therefore presented with an explanation of the benefits and costs of following each.
5. The Comprehensive Plan - Following a review of each alternative, the most feasible and acceptable approach is determined. The decision on which alternative (or combination of alternatives) is best suited for Richland Hills, then becomes the Comprehensive Plan. Thus the City's development plan is based upon technical information as well as community values.
6. Implementation Methods - Having adopted a Comprehensive Plan that indicates what the most desirable and practical community development scenario is, methods for assuring compliance with such a plan are required. These methods essentially "effectuate" the City Plan. Most of the methods are in the form of ordinances and legally enforceable standards for land use and development, however others might include budgeting schedules for major capital improvement as well as financial assistance options for assisting Richland Hills in meeting its planning goals.

Regional Setting

The City of Richland Hills is located in Tarrant County, in North Central Texas. Richland Hills is immediately north and east of Fort Worth, with the southern corporate boundary of Richland Hills abutting the City of Fort Worth. The accompanying figures 1, 2, and 3 indicate the regional location of Richland Hills.

As part of a larger Standard Metropolitan Statistical Area (SMSA), of about three million people, Richland Hills is considered a part of the "Metroplex." The Metroplex is commonly referred to as the urbanized area surrounding Dallas and Fort Worth.
